5) Noted. The relevant file had been closed and sent to Records before the case has been finally disposed of; much time was lost before it became available only after several attempts made for its search with the heavy rush of work on hand in this section.

6) Owing to heavy rush of work and the inadequacy of the existing staff to cope with it, it has not been possible to avoid delays in spite of the best efforts. Proposals have been submitted separately to augment the staff of the branch, but they have not been sanctioned yet. This is resulting in a good deal of strain on the existing staff and routine work has had to be allowed to fall into arrears in order to get through urgent current work, and as a result, records are not as easily or quickly got at as they could otherwise be.

7) If the strength of the C.B. is reinforced as requested separately, it is submitted that there may be no occasion for such delays.

8) The Branch is doing its level best working overtime almost daily to get through the work, but the work is becoming unmanageably heavy for a branch which formerly had a limited range but is now called upon to serve as a clearing house for various kinds of cases in addition to performing its original duties in a vastly multiplied form.

9) Refce. para 4.

6.3.50. 10) I entirely agree with the above note. Unless the staff is augmented it is not possible to avoid delays. Early orders may be passed on the proposals separately putting up.
